Services are provided without regard to race, color, religion, sex, employment or national origin.
Family Planning Peer Health Advocates (PHAs) are teens and young adults, ages 13-24, who serve as leaders and role models in the community. PHAs promote smart decisions about reproductive health during every day conversations with their network of friends and acquaintances.

What are Peer Health Advocates?

Peer health advocates help reduce teen pregnancies and the spread of STDs and HIV in Jacksonville.

Other goals include:

- Developing a healthier community
- Participating in activities that promote health and wellness
- Educating peers in a variety of settings such as schools, churches, health fairs, social clubs, work settings and shopping malls